Performance and Availability:

- Employees are expected to maintain full availability during their regular working hours while working remotely, and must be responsive through company communication channels (e.g., email, Slack, phone).
- Employees must meet all performance targets and adhere to deadlines, regardless of their location.
- If performance issues arise, WFH privileges may be revoked at management's discretion.

Legal and Compliance Considerations:

Working remotely from outside the country may require additional approval due to tax, visa, and legal considerations. Employees must comply with all local labor laws.

Health and Safety:

Employees must ensure that their remote work environment is safe and conducive to productivity. The company is not responsible for any injuries or accidents that occur while working remotely unless proven to be a result of employer negligence.

Termination of WFA Privileges:

WFA privileges may be terminated or adjusted at any time based on business needs, changes in the employee's role, or performance concerns.

Conclusion:

The Work From Anywhere policy is designed to offer flexibility while maintaining high standards of productivity, collaboration, and legal compliance. All employees are expected to abide by the limitations and requirements of this policy. For any questions or further details, please contact the HR department
